

LEMONADE STAND

LAW INFORMATION

The following states have passed the Lemonade Stand Law allowing children to sell lemonade without securing a health permit. This can be on public property like parks, sidewalks, and playgrounds, or on private property with the permission of the owner.

- California
- Nevada
- Utah
- Colorado
- North Dakota
- Nebraska
- Texas
- Missouri
- Louisiana
- Illinois
- New York
- Vermont
- Rhode Island
- Connecticut

For other states, please visit your local city government website to secure a low-cost permit to set up your student(s) and/or child's stand.

Put together a list of the business owners your student(s) wants to visit (or call) to ask them for permission to set up their stand outside of their business. Typically, businesses are excited to support young entrepreneurs by providing stand locations. The sooner your student/child can confirm their location, the better!

Access a business letter that your student/child can use when asking for permission here or the parent version here.

If you would like to teach your student/child the concept of renting a space for their business, you can use this form to complete with the business owner who will be hosting their stand. It's common for businesses to charge a small fee ($1 - $5) to rent the space.
